MUCH BUSINESS AT BOARD MEETING

Proposed Water District Election is Laid Over

At the meeting of the Board of Supervisors Monday, the matter of calling an election for the projected water district in Washington township was laid over until next Monday on the request of all parties concerned in the matter. Further investigation will be made during the week by proponents and opponents of the plan.

F. Goularte, Decoto, was granted a liquor license.

William J. and Edward Schmidt, owners of land to be used for the new turn in the Bulmer Hill road, were ordered paid for the damages to the property through this road.

The sum of $25,000 was asked as an apportionment of school funds for the Hayward school district, and estimates filed by N. P. Nilisen, secretary of the board of school trustees.

The Alameda Chamber of Commerce filed a report against the proposed moving of the county hospital. Reports of California land show work were also filed.

Dr. F. W. Browning, special county health officer, reported on the insanitary conditions on the premises of Louis Silviera, San Lorenzo. He was instructed to see that this be removed.

That a lower tax rate is advisable was declared in a letter received from J. W. Phillips of the Manufacturers' Committee. This was filed.

The County Exposition Commission was authorized to secure help to pack the county exhibit for the Mechanics' Fair in San Francisco. The commission also asked that 3 cents be placed in [illegible] exhibition fund.

"The dental association of this county will co-operate in the matter," said Mrs. Young. We want a main clinic and experts to visit schools and treat children. The dental association had a clinic, but discontinued it. The county should aid us. The dentists will give their services, but cannot pay expenses besides."

"I visited the Sacramento clinic," said Chairman Mullins. "It seemed to be a very beneficial institution. I would suggest that employing these assistants would cost quite a bit, but $5,000 would start the work going. I strongly urge that this be done at once; we must take care of the children, and $5,000 would be well spent in that way. The county can afford it; the citizens cannot afford to ignore this, for the protection of the young is a duty."

"I move," said Supervisor Bridge, "that we establish this clinic by November 1. We should, in the meantime, work out the matter with the dentists. I would refer this to the district attorney for a resolution and discuss the details in the committee of the whole."

The clinic will treat all children in the county, and weekly clincs will be held in Oakland, Alameda and Berkeley.

Lieutenant Colonel Thomas H. Rees, U. S. A., addressing the Board, said that the plan of opening the canal bridges, to be taken over by the county, only sixteen hours daily may be approved with the exception of the Webster street bridge. He said further that the War Department probably would not brook any obstruction of the channel due to inoperation of the Webster street bridge. He rather favored, however, the plan to open the Park street bridge for sixteen hours daily, and the Fruitvale avenue bridge eight hours when the county takes the bridges over from the government as planned.

"I am not authorized to turn these bridges over," reported Rees, "on any conditions other [illegible] those sta[illegible] in

THE CALIFORNIA OF PAST AND TODAY

Facts and Figures About Our Great Commonwealth

A paper presented at the September California Day meeting of the Niles Woman's Club, by Mrs. Geo. N. Mac Rae.

A glance backward sometimes is as beneficial as a glance forward, for in comparing the present with the past are we best enabled to form some reasonable idea of what we may expect in the future. California in 1846 was an outlying and neglected Mexican province with a population of between 8,000 and 12,000. Nearly all the better families were superior to average Mexicans having generally a purer Castilian blood, since in many cases the colonists had come directly from directly from Spain. Their chief industry was raising cattle for the hides and tallow. Their private lives were care free, careless and on the whole, as the world goes, moderately charming and innocent.

The missions, once prosperous, had fallen into decay and the mission Indians had in a large part disappeared. The people rode a great deal, dressed in gay colors, had very pleasant social gatherings, enjoyed many sports together, drank at times, gambled a little, lived to a good old age and raised large families.

The Yankee traders coming from the United States, by the Boston bound ships, brought many colored calicoes, boots, shoes and nearly all the manufactured goods consumed in the country and the Californian paid for these in hides at $2.00 a piece. In fact, they paid enormous prices for the things, of course, without [illegible] ng of along the coast of the Pacific for that great distance are settlements. villages and posts and back all is wilderness and bareness and Indian country. States formed out of territory thinly peopled, necessarily, inevitably break up the relation existing between the two branches of the legislature and destroy its balance. They break the constitutional relation between the senate and the house of representatives. if you bring in new states, every state that comes must have two senators, while it may have 50,000 or 60,000 people and no more. You will have several states which shall have more senators than representatives. Can anything disfigure and derange the frame of government under which we live more than that?

"And let me add that this disproportion can never be diminished. It must remain forever. And how about California?

"But if just about San Francisco and perhaps Monterey emigrants should settle to make up one state, then the people 500 miles off would have another state. And so this disproportion of the senate to the people would go on, must go on and we cannot prevent it.

"I say Sir, that according to my conscientious conviction we are fixing on the United States a form of government, a monstrosity, a disfiguration, an enormity. But there, Sir, what relives the case from its enormity? What is our reliance? Why is it that we stipulate that these new states shall be brought in at a suitable time? We have had some experience of that. Texas was admitted in December, 1845 and the two Texas senators turned the balance of the senate and overthrew the tariff of 1842. Sir, perhaps in 1850 a similar question will be agitated, and what then? But further, there are some things one can argue against and submit to if overruled, without mortification. There are other things that seem to affect one's (conscie[illegible]sness of being a sensible

DOINGS OF THE ESSANAY PEOPLE

Interesting Notes from the Big Picture Company

The numerous passengers who were waiting at the station at Niles on Monday afternoon for the 2:59 express train from Sacramento for Oakland and San Francisco were put to great delay and annoyance by the failure of that train to arrive. The delay was said to be due to a failure of the locomotive drawing the train. The delayed travelers finally got away on the 5:13 train from San Jose, arriving in San Francisco two hours and twenty minutes late.

The delay would have been much more annoying but for the fact that Mr. Kirkland, director, and a troupe of Essanay players accompanied by a carmeraman, were engaged during most of the time in taking a number of pictures for a rural comedy upon which they are working. Great interest was taken in the proceedings by the crowd at the station.

Mr. Henry Greenan, who nas been with the Essanay company for the past six months, leaves for Los Angeles, Sunday to join the Universal Film Company. May success attend him.

Mr. Robbins is getting up a new comedy in which the Essanay bear will be featured in a number of stunts.

The structural iron workers are making rapid progress on the framework for the glass dome over the immense stage in the Essanay studio. It will be possible to arange ten complete sets of scenery on the stage at one time.

Mr. Kirkland, accompanied by a cameraman and several members of the company left Thursday to take a

LADIES' GUILD MEETING

The Ladies' Guild met Wednesday afternoon, with an atendance of 29.

The time of the business meeting was mostly taken up with planning and discussing the Cosmopolitan Social to be given the evening of October 16.

The ladies are planning to cover their parlor floors with rugs which will be made in the Guild under the direction of Miss DeCora.

A very interesting talk on rings and ring-wearing was given during the afternoon by Miss DeCora.

NEW S. P. TIMETABLE

HOW WE MARRY

"My dear Miss Boynton," he said, speaking in very low but very distinct tones, "Lady Belletowers tells me that you have kindly consented to stay for a little while at Belletowers, in order that we may become better acquainted."

"I never promised anything; indeed I did not. I hope she has not misled you;" and Nora spoke very jerkily, half crying the while.

"Do you know, little one," he said, still holding her hand and patting it, "if you had accepted me at once, without any consideration, I should not love you half so much?"

"Why not?" asked Nora, opening her eyes very wide as she looked at him.

"Because I cannot expect a sweet little beauty like you to care for an old fellow such as I am now, unless it is because you know that you are all that he has in the world to love, and that he means to devote his life to you."

"Don't husbands always do that?" asked Nora, ingenuously.

"Certainly not, unless they marry for love; and I love you, sweet Nora, with all my heart. I may call you Nora, may I not?"

"Yes, if you like. I never was called anything else till I came to Belletowers."

The permission was not very encouraging, but Sir Paul only smiled. He evidently either had an immense belief in his own power of making himself beloved, or conjectured that the assumption of it would have the effect of carrying the citadel he was beseiging.

"Well then, Nora," he went on, "you will answer me one very little question, will you not? You will tell me that you do not hate me very much."

"Hate you, no. Why should I hate you, Sir Paul? You have always been very kind to me."

"So long as you do not hate me, I am willing to say no more on the subject for the present; for I see it is one that alarms you, if it is not altogether hateful to you, sweet Nora."

That night, only a parti carre sat down to dinner at Lord Belletowers, and one of the guests was very silent, leaving all the conversation to her host and hostess and Sir Paul.

In the course of the evening Lady Belletowers asked Nora to sing. It was not perhaps very kind of her her refusal of Sir Paul as a personal injury. As for Sir Paul himself, he but rarely spoke to her, and poor Nora almost wished herself back in the third-class carriage, journeying to her northern home. She was fully aware that she would be received there with gibes and taunts; but still it was her home, and she had as much right to be there as her overbearing, disagreeable sisters.

She was lying in bed one morning brooding upon her unhappy lot, when the mail brought her a letter in her mother's handwhiting.

Nora trembled as she opened it. She knew so well what it would contain. Mrs. Boynton never wrote letters except thoroughly to the purpose.

"I hear from Lady Belletowers," the letter said, "that you are throwing away the opportunity of a splendid match. I insist upon your marrying Sir Paul Statfield. If you come back here except as his affianced wife you will not find your life so comfortable as it has hitherto been."

"Comfortable!" murmured Nora. "If it is to be less comfortable now, what will it be?"

Her mother went on:

"You know full well how straitened are our means. I shall discharge our only servant, and shall expect you to wait on me and your sisters!"

Nora fell back on her pillow after reading these lines.

'Oh, Babley, Babley!" she cried, as the tears coursed each other down her cheeks.

At last, however, she composed herself, and got up and dressed.

It was very luxurious and pleasant in the sunny little bedroom at Belletowers, and her gracious surroundings seemed to shed a cheering influence over her while she dwadled there.

Since she had had this peep into a fair, beautiful world it would be very hard to go back and play Cinderella, she thought.

After she had twisted up her pretty hair, she pulled up the blind and looked on the park, where the sun was shining brightly on the hoar frosted grass. She watched the scene for a while as she compared it to that dull, close town where she had passed so many miserable days.

While she was thinking now horrible it would be to go back there, some one came slowly through a tiny copse at the bottom of the lawn. It was Sir Paul.

"He was old, certainly, Nora thought, as she watched him; but he had a pleasant face, and his slight, straight figure looked very young in his suit of dark blue serge; besides, he would not make a Cinderella of her. He was not Babley, certainly; but then, Babley! Oh dear, oh dear! life was horribly hard and crooked.

Notwithstanding her misery, Nora took a piece of red geranium out of a bouquet of hot-house flowers in a vase on the dressing table, and pinned it coquettishly in her dark blue frock; then she looked at herself two or three times in the glass, twisting her brown hair into fascinating little curls and finally she went down into the hall,

State Fair Awards

SACRAMENTO. Sept. 25—Never in the history of the California State Fair has there ever been a better showing of saddle and coach horses as there was at the exposition just over.

The entries were larger than any previous year and the judging continued until the close of the fair on Saturday night.

Col. J. A. Logsdon of Blackburn, Mo., who judged those classes and also officiated at the horse show, said that he found far better stock in California than he had even anticipated. He said that the breeders of high class saddle and coash horses have the right idea in selecting the best sort of foundation stock. He predicts a great future for the pleasure horse game in California.

Col. Logsdon had one of the most difficult tasks of judging that there was at the fair, officiating in the premium classes in the day and at the horse show at night. He was obliged to use the keenest judgment in placing the many fine animals and acquitted himself with credit.

Decidedly to the credit of the draft horse breeders of California was the show in this department at the recent State Fair. John T. Caine of Logan, Utah, who judged this stock, was profuse in his words of praise for the draft horse exhibitors. He said that the importers are showing keen judgment in their selections of stallions and mares for foundation stock, and that the native classes are hard to beat anywhere. The Shire horses of Henry Wheatly's Salvador Stock Farm at Napa, the Percherons of McLaughlin Bros. of Oakland and the native bred stock of H. G. Learned of Stockton were of unusual selection. Louis Titus of Tracy and numerous other breeders who broke into the winnings all show high class stock, accremarks of meeting Sir Paul at the bottom of the stairs.

"Good morning, Sir Paul," she said, very cordially. "I hope you have enjoyed your walk. I saw you from my window."

"It is delightful out of doors today. Will you come for a stroll? Lady Belletowers is on the terrace talking to the gardener.

Nora consented, and was speedily wrapped in a large ulster which Sir Paul took down from a peg close by, the hood being thrown over her head instead of a hat.

She loked very bewitching as she stood there laughing; and so Sir Paul thought. He was delighted, too, to see her laugh, for she had been nearer crying than laughing for the last few days.

She was going to marry Sir Paul. She had made up her mind. That word Cinderella had decided it. So it was no use to cry any more, she supposed.

A moment later, and they were strolling beside the frozen lake, on which the defrauded ducks waddle awkardly.

"Well," he says, after a silence, and stooping down to her with a kindly, unembarrassed smile, "it is late days with me for pretty speeches, but I can't help comparing you at this moment to some lovely flowery landscape over which heavy snow-clouds are suddenly gathered; I, with my gray hair, reperesenting the snow-cloud, of course."

"You don't seem at all wintery to me," she said, encouragingly; for she had made up her mind that since she was to give herself to this man she would not spoil the gift by want of graciousness.

"I feel young at heart, at any rate," he said, gratefully. "Young at heart when I gaze on you."

And now she looked down and blushed, and really did for the moment forget his years in the courteous charm of his words and manner.

"And say, then," he went on, have you decided? Will you consent to be an old man's darling?"

"No," she said, roguishly, "I will not." Then after a little pause which she reveled, I am afraid, in the anxiety she was causing, she said with a glad sunny laugh, "Because you are not old enough. But I will be your true and loving wife."

She held up her face

Baseball News

In one of the best played games of the season Niles defeated Livermore by a grand ninth inning rally on the local grounds last Sunday.

Livermore scored first in their half of the fourth inning, Lamb hit safely to left but was forced out at second by Coffey, Dolan to Gibson, Coffey stole second, Holmes then hit to left, the ball bounding over the fence giving him a home run and scoring Coffey ahead of him. The next two men were easy outs.

Niles evened up matters in their half of the second after Bresslauer had gone out, Ludwig to Lamb. Gibson hit the ball clean over left field fence in fair territory giving him a home run. Robinson went out, Speck to Lamb. Totherole then followed with one of those hits that made him famous; this one was a three-bagger into deep center field, Dolan followed with a hit down the third base line scoring Totherole. Dolan was out a moment later trying to steal second. That ended the scoring until the last of the ninth when Niles came to the bat. Bresslauer led off, hitting safely to right. "Home Run" Gibson drew a walk. Robinson who has found it rather difficult to connect for safe hits of late, then broke up the game with a hit past third. Bresslauer who was off with the crack of the bat, scored from second. Gibson came all the way from first but his run did not score as the game was already won.

The game was featured by the clever fielding of both teams and the long hits which counted in the scoring of the few runs. Lamb of the Livermore team hit safely four times out of as many trips to the bat. Another feature was a double play in which the whole Niles infield took part in. J. Garbini tried to sacrifice Wagner to second Lund threw him out at first and Wagner over ran second and before he could get back Robinson threw to Gibson who threw to Perry. Totherole finally scored the put out.

Notes on Game

Gibson secured another home run in last Sunday's game. This one was a clean drive over left field fence. Of the four home runs made on the local field, Gibson is credited with two.

Tomorow (Sunday) the Niles baseball team, accompanied by the enthusiastic local fans, will journey to Livermore to play the club at that place.

A special car will be attached to the train leaving Niles for Livermore at 10:30 Sunday morning.

Round trip tickets will cost 75 cents, and persons desiring to make the trip should see the manager of the Niles baseball club today, and as early as possible. The game will be called at 2:30. Returning, the special will arrive in Niles about 6:13.

NILES

The many friends of the Jarvis family who formerly made their home in Washington township were greatly saddened by the death of Mrs. Belle Jarvis Cutter at her home in Berkeley last Monday night, from heart trouble. The funeral was held at the home in Berkeley on Thursday with burial at Mountain View cemetery. A few short years a happy bride and Death has claimed her for its own.
